Artistic Director's Notes

THE WIZARD OF OZ is one of the most famous stories ever told. Huge numbers of people through the world know of Dorothy, Toto and their cohorts adventures across the "Wonderful Land of Oz." So why do something again that everybody already has opinions about? Everyone knows of the Green Wicked Witch of the West, the multicoloured Munchkins, Dorothy's Blue dress, the Emerald City...

The idea that people dream in colour when their real world is in black and white is both metaphorical and wish fulfilment. I think that we see the world in black and white almost always. I like this - I don't like that. Colour means ambiguity. So this production is primarily black and white. Colour is only there when something is truly confusing. I've always been confused by this story and these characters: the stupid Scarecrow who thinks more clearly than anyone, the heartless Tin Man who feels more deeply than anyone, the Lion who uses his cowardice as a remarkable shield. They say one thing and are another.

And then there's Dorothy. She is the ultimate child who runs away from home because she can't see anything other than her own view of Black and White. Then instantly regrets it. And, because she is a child, her chosen friends and foes are truly an either/or relationship to her. Everything is Black and White.

Then there's the moral to this story: There's No Place Like Home. Its simplicity is both heartwarming and misleading. What it really means is: There's no place like somewhere where you are taken care of. That's really where your home is. Relations, friends - new and old - they are home.
